Last week I told you the things most wanted in life—our health, intelligence, contentment and esteem.

Health is probably the most desirable blessing in the world. Yes, I will state that good health is nature's greatest blessing. Yet how few of us really appreciate its true significance and worth until it has passed from us either temporarily or permanently. Interest naturally centers around a man with robust body, vigorous mind, clear eye and elastic tread. To be a man among men and to keep pace with the arduous demands of the twentieth century, which has imposed burdens upon us heretofore not dreamed of. We must preserve our health. While we have much to smile at that is no fault of ours, coming by heredity, circumstance, accident or something else over which we have no control, most of it can be traced to our own door. The man who is too fat has usually his self-indulgence and laziness to blame. Not always, but as a rule.

A careful diet, which any good doctor may prescribe, if it be vigorously followed, will reduce flesh, but it takes pain, hunger and constant self-control. You have to pay the price. Systematic exercise is not agreeable but it is essential. Upon the indolent and the greedy, an army of disease, stands ready to descend. If you are hollow-cheated, stoop-shouldered, with bad complexion and scraggy, ugly teeth, it means you have steadily defaulted in paying the price; it took more pains than you were willing to give to hold yourself habitually erect, to regulate your diet and scrupulously to care for the hygienic condition of your mouth. Health is the prize of battle. It implies faithfully keeping your body under the rules of reason.

Intelligence, also sown, comes of itself. To have a well-stored mind, good judgment and swift intuition, you have to pay the price. As a rule, they are not the gifts of God, they are the rewards of labor which is application and concentration.

Nearly all boys, scarcely an exception, hate to go to school. I have often wondered if it was caused from the exuberance of youth or cussedness, laziness or lack of moral support. The age of adolescence is often the time of great intellectual inertia. Books are tiresome and the grind of the school room very wearying. The temptation to loaf, to play, to get out is strong. It is a sort of "The Call of the Wild." This is the time when every effort of your young life should be bent to overcome this great chasm which lies in your pathway of study and mind culture. Wave it back as you would a malicious companion, or you may choose the life-long path of mental shirking. If you don't you will develop into a stupid, narrow-minded man, uninteresting to those around you and pushed aside from the good things of life by those who think faster, work harder and are always "Charley on the spot."

Intelligence comes only as a result of constant mental exertion of systematic mental self-control. There can be no knowledge without study. Wisdom costs, and whoever refuses the price shall not, nor never can have the goods.

Study—untiring and persistent application; self-control—this is the price. Will you pay it?

Next week we will take up contentment and esteem, which will furnish the subject of the four great attributes which go to make life a real life, and a boy a real man. S. M.
